To Whom it May Concern,

It is a privilege to write this letter of recommendation for Eyad Ashraf. I had the pleasure of working with Eyad for just over a year in my capacity as President and Head of Programs for the Youth Science Journal (YSJ). While our time working together was limited to that period, Eyad was a full-stack developer for the journal for two years, and his contributions were fundamental to our operations.

When I first assumed my role at YSJ, Eyad was already an experienced member of the team, having served for a full year under the previous administration. He immediately stepped in to facilitate the transition between the outgoing and incoming boards. He shared critical files, managed repositories, and transferred operational techniques, which prevented the major technical disruption we had anticipated. Because he knew both eras of leadership, he was the person I first collaborated with to settle the organization down and begin preparation for the new season.

Eyad quickly became a central figure in my administration. Early on, he managed the website entirely by himself until helpers arrived. Even during that solo period, he assisted in interviewing and selecting candidates for the new junior web developer roles, acting as the technical expert for our environment. Once the new team members were in place, he took it upon himself to train them, familiarizing them with our development workflows to ensure smooth collaboration.

His specific technical achievements at YSJ were highly impactful. He moved far beyond seasonal website updates and information management. Eyad entirely built a customized application portal from scratch for both our junior and senior program applicants. This was a fully functional system tailored precisely to our brand requirements, which successfully replaced our need for Google Forms and other third-party tools. He ensured that this portal allowed us to track user registration and application submission numbers effectively. He also developed integrated functionality within the portal for assigning applications to reviewers and making final acceptance or rejection decisions directly.

Additionally, Eyad developed a sophisticated application that automatically generated graduation certificates and transcripts. It was a fully customizable system that removed our reliance on manual tools like Illustrator or third-party paid services. The certificates also included a useful digital certification feature.

Eyad was a reliable pillar of my year at YSJ. He is deeply engaged, collaborative, and hard-working. What made his dedication even more remarkable is his maturity relative to his age; he is only fifteen, yet his work ethic and consistency matched much more experienced developers. Even during busy exam periods, he did not procrastinate. He ensured that the critical infrastructure he managed remained stable and that project work was delivered on schedule.

I strongly recommend Eyad Ashraf. He possesses excellent technical capability and a level of professional reliability that would be valuable in any organization he joins.

Sincerely,

Ahmed Eldesouki
